

Stenham Strengthens Local Investment Team

Stenham, the independently owned asset management and private wealth management Group is pleased to announce that it has recently hired Matthew Bailey to add to its existing investment team with particular focus on supporting Stenham Wealth Management, the investment advisory business established following Credit Suisse's decision last year to cease offering direct services in the Channel Islands.

David Baker, Managing Director of Stenham Wealth Management commented "I am delighted Matt has joined Stenham to help meet the growing demand for our services in the Islands and particularly with Guernsey based clients".

Commenting on his new role Matt said, "I am excited to be joining Stenham at such a crucial time in their development and working for such a dynamic investment advisory firm. I look forward to directly supporting the ambitious growth plan that builds upon Stenham's already impressive footprint in the Islands."

Matt will be based in Guernsey and work alongside the existing investment team reporting to Adrian Starr. He will build business relationships with high net worth individuals, advisers and intermediaries in the Island and leverage his considerable experience gained in previous roles with Credit Suisse, and more recently SG Hambros. Matt is a Chartered Fellow of the Chartered Institute for Securities & Investment, holds the Chartered Wealth Manager designation and has completed Level II of the CFA Program.
